THE SAGAPONACK GREEN SPACE
CELEBRATES ITS SILVER ANNIVERSARY

While many of the romantic structures on artist Robert Dash's bucolic Sagaponack property date back centuries, the garden itself is celebrating 25 years as an open-to-the-public green space. The centerpiece of the festivities will be the Much Ado About Madoo benefit on June 15. Stroll the Madoo Conservancy's myriad gardens—including the new silver-leaf plot with willows, foxglove, iris, and lavender—and tour Dash's former studio, now used for film screenings, lectures, and musical performances. An exhibition on display through July 27 will offer a broad look at the history of Madoo, including some of Dash's never-before-seen original charcoal drawings and paintings that capture the evolution of the acreage. "It's exciting to bring out all of that material and really show people what a lasting influence Madoo has had on the gardening world," says executive director Alejandro Saralegui. madoo.org —JILL SIERACKI

The late artist Robert Dash's former Hamptons home is now an open-to-the-public garden.
